

HOW SMITHWICK WAS SHOT.

Mr. Kruger's Story of his Defense of Himself and his Domestics.

Henry Kruger, the liquor merchant, of 500 West Fifty-third street, who on Saturday afternoon shot and mortally wounded Francis Smithwick, told his story to Justice Vandell in the Yorkville Police Court yesterday. He said he was in the wholesale department of his store with Adolph Krueger, his bookkeeper, and the porter. His nephew had charge of the barroom, Smithwick and a companion came into the barroom, and with a third man, whom they appeared to know, took several drunks. Smithwick and the third man then quarreled violently. Kruger lives over the store, and Mr. Krueger was upstairs when Kruger ordered the brawlers to leave the premises. They refused to go, and were ejected after a minute, and they remained until the dispute was fully settled. They then strolled up to the bartender in the street. There they went up to Tom avowedly to get him to intercede with John Ivory. All three began to pest the store with stories. Kruger begged them to desist. They laughed and continued Kruger. "I told the porter to go up stairs for my pistol. They continued to throw the stones and I fired a shot over their heads. Tom advanced toward me with a heavy mace in his hand. He raised it to throw at me, and said, 'You ain't got nerve enough to shoot.' He was leaning forward, and I shot him in the temple, the trigger. He clapped his hand to his right breast and staggered away. I afterward surrendered myself to Capt. Kilian at his station house."

Mr. Krueger, who has a good reputation, was turned over to Coroner Knox, who released him on $5,000 bail, which was readily obtained. Justice Vandell remanded Ivory to the watchhouse for six months on the plain of Adolph Krueger. Smithwick is in the Roosevelt Hospital. He is shot through the right side of the chest, and has been unable to live with his parents at Sixty-fifth street and Tenth avenue.
